

Detachment

Skye Marzo

there must be something in my genetic makeup that makes people slippery. Like a cloud clutches color—first pink, then a moment later, grey.
Ineffective. I wish I could miss you the way you want me to: a flower that, without water, would never wilt.